

Lori M.

“The Club I Never Wanted To Join.” That’s the phrase tossed around by all of us “survivors”! A true statement, for sure. Having said that, however, I wouldn’t trade my membership for all the riches in the world.

What has my experience with cancer taught me?

Many things: among them humility, gratitude, loyalty, love, responsibility, purpose, spirituality

I am humbled by the cancer itself, by the knowledge of my doctors, by the loyalty of my friends and by the love of my husband, children, and family.

I am unendingly grateful for and to these people in my life.

The positive energy in this universe far outweighs the negative. There is a higher being in this world and he/she is present in my life and I have been given a new purpose.

To borrow from Lance Armstrong, a family hero, I have learned the responsibility of survivorship.

The BCCR provides the avenue for me to channel my energy

Thank you to this wonderful organization.
